Facts

- Menara Budaya occupies a narrow rectangular site.
- Viewed along one of the city's principal boulevards, Menara Budaya appears in the foreground beneath the twin towers of Cesar Pelli's Petronas Buildings, but it is in no way overawed by its loft neighbor.
- The service-core, which consists of the lift lobby, toilets, fire stairs, and mechanical and electrical (M&E) rooms, is located on the east side of the structure. It acts as a barrier or shield, keeping the morning sun out of the offices, while allowing natural lighting into the core areas.
- The typical internal office floors are column-free. The external skin is glazed with tempered float glass and there are a variety of sun-shading devices on the west- and south-facing facades.
- The roof-top level is used as a communal space, and a tensile membrane structure provides protection to an entertainment area.
